Real First-Class Clothing

WANAMAKER & BROWN.

The thoughtful and discriminating portion of the public who purchase

READY-MADE CLOTHING

Will see with even but little consideration that the old house of Wanamaker & Brown is in a position to give superior advantages to its patrons These advantages consist in supplying goods that are

FIRST—PROPERLY MADE UP.
SECOND—MATERIALS SHRUNKEN
THIRD—EXCELLENT IN FIT

The cut and finish of our Men's and Boys Clothing is of a character to out rank the Ordinary Custom Work.

We found out long ago by actual experience that garments bought up from the Wholesale Stocks are by no means so reliable as those made up under our own personal supervision Neither will the cut and general style (after wearing) bear a comparison to our own careful make By making our own goods the

Producer and Consumer

Are brought in direct contact, and in consequence the latter reaps no small advantage

Boys' and Youths' Clothing.

This forms a very considerable proportion of our business, and we are satisfied that we can convince any one that we always offer the Handsomest and Best Finished Goods known to the trade

LOW PRICES

Do not always mean good value On this head we shall only say that when Style and Quality are taken into account we are not, under any circumstances ever undersold, and seldom are the prices to which dealers fall as low as our first and only one fixed price to everybody

Our Stock is Enormous,

Especially in thin goods, suited to the present weather Inviting a visit and recommendations from our friends

We Remain, Very Respectfully,

A PICTURE

BY F L M

Girt round by sunburnt meadows newly mowed
The trees its time-worn shingles half concealing
A shabby cottage stands beside the road
The paint in patches peeling

Before the house mid weeds and grass dense,
Stand hollyhocks and stunted lilac bushes,
And through the broken palings of the fence
A ragged rose tree pushes

And all is silent save the hum of bees
The patient plodding beetle's dreamy droning,
Or, in the swaying branches of the trees,
The west wind's restless moaning

But hark! through window and through door there flow
Sounds of a feeble voice's plaintive singing
With a forgotten song of long ago
The lonely room is ringing

A childless widow chants hymns learned of yore
In country churches sung by rustic voices,
And as the sacred notes through silence soar,
Her placid soul rejoices

Her eyes are on a hillside, where green graves,
Deep buried in the unshorn grass lie sleeping,
Over the simple tombs a willow waves
And tangled vines are creeping

She marks them not, her inward eyesight sees
Beyond the glory of the sun descending,
Her blessed dead, with solemn psalmodies,
Before the white throne bending

For though her voice be harsh, and worn, and old,
As on her lips the trembling music lingers
Within her heart she hears the harps of gold
Swept by celestial fingers

Day dies stars gleam, night's dusky shadows loom
The swallow homeward his wayward flight is winging,
Yet in the quiet of the growing gloom
She still is gently singing

CHILD'S FAITH

BY MRS S M B PIATT

All beautiful tales I trust are true,
But here is a grave in the moss
And there is the sky And the buds are blue,
And a butterfly blows across

Yes, here is the grave and there is the sky,
To the one or the other we go
And between them waves the butterfly,
Like a soul that does not know

Somewhere? Nowhere? Too golden head
And lips that I miss and miss
You would tell me the secret of the dead—
Could I find you with a kiss

* * * Come here I say, little child of mine
Come with your bloom and your truth
(If he should believe in the life divine
I will not believe in death!)

"Where is your brother?"—I question low,
And wait for his wise reply,
Does he say—"Down there in the grave"? Ah, no,
He says, with a laugh "In the sky!"

THE DAPHNE

Yachting in Its Relations to Love and a Purpose in Life

One day there sat at lunch, in their own cottage at Springtide beach, a pair of veterans in marriage As such, it was the custom of all their young animated friends to apply to them for solace and advice in moments of need Suddenly there was heard upon the resounding piazza the rapid pat a tap of ladies' feet

"More trouble," said the gentleman

"It sounds like Nannie Armitage," responded the lady, listening with her hand hovering like a dove over her tea service There was a rustling and interlocution, in which a servant played a part Then there was a sound of a rushing of skirts The matron arose and hastened into the bijou parlor adjoining The door was burst open, and there appeared a wild and gasping fairy all in blue and white She had bracelets on her wrists, a jingling chatelaine depended from her belt, and some of her pretty blonde hair had straggled down upon her round forehead She seemed to be violently repressing herself Her bosom was in a tumult and she wrung her soft hands She gave the an instant at the tea room door, which was slowly closing, and then she opened her red lips, threw out her arms, and in the very fury of sorrow, darted upon her friend crying—

"Oh Polly, Polly—I've quarreled with George!"

"Quarreled with George!"

"Yes, quarreled with George It's true, it's true Oh, please don't make me say it again, please don't!" And she cast herself upon her friend's neck, and, winding her arms about her, she pressed her burning cheeks upon that secure and tender refuge, the shoulder, and gave herself up to grief The master of the castle appeared at the door But there instantly came into his wife's face, as it confronted him over the throbbing form of the confiding one, a sudden cat's paw Therefore he quietly retreated, and returned to his table again

"Quarreled with George" pursued the sympathizer, "can it be possible! Is it"—(slowly)—"is it—a—a tiff Nannie? or is it" (quickly)—"a very serious matter? a—"

"Why, we have separated," cried the sufferer, "we have had very hard words, and we have taken leave of each other forever"

Here there was a long silence, one of those pauses which always occur in such extremities, and which are occupied insensibly by both parties in an approach to a common ground One of the two people became more calm, and the friend became more sorrowful even as the other was sorrowful

"Poor Nannie," she murmured in her ear, "poor child—you were so happy, too"

"Oh, oh, so happy," was the return, in a broken whisper, "so very happy, Polly And it is all over now—I—I think I shall die"

"And what is it about, Nannie?"

"Oh, about the Daphne"

"What? George's yacht?"

"Y—yes Oh, how I hate the name! It has made me terribly miserable I so long for rest, Polly—so long to hide me somewhere out of the way of human beings and human concerns I—I am very weary and heart broken—I—oh dear—oh, dear!"

There was a tale to be told. The shades were closed, and they went and sat down where the sea breeze blew upon them It was indeed about the Daphne, the boat which was so truly famous for sailing on the wind She was a schooner of seventy and odd tons' burden, shaped like a fish, winged like an eagle, and posed like a swan She was only two years old, and had already out-sailed the club fleet in all weathers, and had borne away the "Van Schoonhoven cup" two years in succession

"To-morrow," said Miss Nannie, with interpolated sobs, "you know that this great race is to come off. If the Daphne wins it, she will retain the cup, and—"

"Oh, I know all about it," was the blithe response, "Tom has been telling me for three weeks It will be a tremendous affair, and I should think that all the world was coming—oh, let me ask you before I forget, do you remember how much the Daphne won by, in 1871?"

"In 1871?" queried Miss Nannie, in a feeble voice. "In 1871, I think it was by eight and three quarters minutes, yes, that is right, eight and three quarters minutes."

"And in 1872?"

Miss Nannie, with her pretty finger on her quivering lips, reflected a moment

"In 1872, the Petrel, George's great rival, came in ahead, but the Daphne had a time allowance of fifteen minutes, and so she really beat the Petrel and the whole fleet by five minutes. I know George was delighted. He said he had rather have won that race than a dozen like that of 1871."

"And who owns the Petrel, Nannie?"

"Oh, Clary Vedder" said she

"Clary Vedder! Why, that little fly away? Susie Staats is his fiancee She was the one that was so much in love with George in the Tirositis, two years ago But he didn't smile upon her, and she's hated him ever since Ah, wouldn't she be happy if her Clary's Petrel would only carry off the cup!" And the astute tactician shook her head and reflected upon the matter But in a moment she returned to earth again with a start "Forgive me, Nannie, come, poor child, tell me, tell me all about your trouble," and she wound her arm about her afresh, and bent her head to listen

"But George is so taken up with his pleasure, Polly It is yacht, yacht, yacht from one week's end to the next Yesterday, he was doing nothing but experimenting with a new, self detaching boat fall He is all the time thinking of dead water and his new wire rigging, and his copper sheathing He is allowing his soul to rust out, Polly. One can't be playing all the time" Here she ran off into a velvety denunciation of George and all his works She granted him handsome and generous, and ardent, and supremely intelligent, "but alas! Polly," she cried, with a tremulous sigh in her soft eyes, "he doesn't see the great world as I see it"

"And you asked him to give up yachting, Nannie?"

"Yes, Polly, I begged him to think of the precious time he was wasting I told him that I did not believe he was serious enough and he said he thought he was too serious already, and—"

"And then, what?"

"Why, then, I explained that with his talents he ought to be doing something great in some way or other The world is full of terrible wrong and wickedness, and I told him that he was very culpable not to be a reformer"

"And what did he say to that?"

"Well, he said 'Pshaw'"

"Did he?"

"Yes I simply replied 'I implore you to stop this waste of your youth, Determine to make up your mind to do greater and better things than cruising about in a pretty boat Say to yourself, "I will cease"' I urged him to come to a decision at once, to turn about immediately to make the splendid resolve to quench his childish desire for a transient triumph over the Petrel to-morrow, but—but—"

"But what, Nannie?"

"But he only walked up and down very furiously, while I sat there pleading and beseeching until I grew excessively tired, I am sure I must have looked very wan and lonely"

"And then I suppose the quarrel began?"

"Yes, immediately George was like a tiger He said he had a mind to turn fisherman at once, and to remain so all his days Then, Polly, I began to discover that the sprinkling of roses on my path was a very shallow one. He finished by asking me in a very excited manner what it was that I wished him to do What pursuit or labor would seem proper for him to undertake? What were the terrible faults that he was committing? 'George,' said I indignantly 'I leave all that to yourself, your own conscience is sensitive enough to furnish you with convicting answers' Here Miss Nannie broke down for a moment and then broke down into another fit of weeping, and cast herself for a second time upon the tender bosom of her friend

The friend remained a moment in deep thought, then she whispered in a sharp demand, "haven't you been to hear little Benjamin Dreyfus preach lately?"

"Oh, yes Polly, all the girls go"

"I thought so"

"And why pray?" Miss Nannie looked up with inflamed eyes

"Well, because you seem to think that poor boys are parting after splendid virtues, and he is not at all sure of what they consist or whether they may be got Listen a moment to the Trumpet of Wisdom Here is such a thing as keeping your purities and his as well as your faults You have suddenly conceived the idea that George is not leading a life that is distinctly profitable to anybody It takes a pretty wise person to prove that to begin with, but suppose it true, we find you wishing to animate him to think more—to open his eyes to the good he may do with his wealth—to learn the pleasures of a more esthetic, intellectual and—"

"And religious Polly"

"Yes and religious and is that your plan?"

"Yes"

"Well, and how do you set about it By putting yourself in a position to dictate him anew? By placing yourself in advance? By instructing yourself in the definite methods by which he may rise? No! For when he fairly asked you what he should do, you at once fell back upon your sentiment You should know that you must inoculate people with goodness not shoot it into them It was not the most sagacious plan for you, a full fledged Puritan, to leap suddenly out, and demand that your best friend should give up his best pleasure because you, in solitary self communion had decided that he should If you are convinced that the few weeks in the year which are spent by George in such sport might be better employed, you should have set about persuading him by slow degrees I venture to believe that you have not the remotest idea of the pleasure of which you wish to deprive him I think you have never been upon the water No? I thought not Then, before you ask George to surrender something of which you do not understand the nature, would it not have been better to have asked yours If 'Am I sure that I am not making mischief?' If you had done so, then this serious trouble would not have come upon you Benjie Dreyfus, who is ailing and bloodless, though very good, has raised you into a moral atmosphere too refined for one to breathe on short notice. Therefore, if you want George to ascend to those lofty heights with you, you must tell him alone, and perhaps he will grow accustomed to it by degrees I don't believe, my poor Nannie—"

At this juncture the sound of eight horses feet upon the roadway in front of the cottage burst in at the window Then there was a great reining up and a great prancing and snorting and jingling of silver harness-bells, intermingled with the high tones of female imperiousness "Hi, Pip! hi, Pop! hi, I say!" Then "Mrs Tom Townsend! Mrs Tom! Polly!"

"It's Susie Staats! All on fire, as usual Sit still, Nannie, please She won't get out!"

She opened the shades

"Oh, there you are, Polly, aren't you?"

"Yes, Miss Noise, here I am Aren't you coming in?"

"Dear, no! Pip, be quiet! I just come up, Polly, about the regatta, to-morrow Clary has got passes for the judges' boat, and won't you and Tom go aboard with ma and me? I know you won't feel like cruising. Say yes"

"Yes, and many thanks"

"Good! D'ye know I've been to see the cup—the Van Schoonhoven, you know? It's a beauty! All satin work and bright lights The Petrel's going to win it, this year, because Clary has had a new—but that's a secret I do so want him to get it away from George! I suppose it would make Nannie horribly—keep still, Pop, I'll kill him!" She made a dash at a fly upon her pony's flank but as most flies do under like circumstances, it flew off intact. "I never saw them so thick as they are, this year, P-o-o-r Pip! P-o-o-r Pop! Whoa! Hi! Oh, Polly, they're such vexatious delights! They will go, you see. Regatta will be early! We'll paddle off to the judges' boat at 9 o clock from Clary's pier By by"

And with her ribboned whip properly crossed, and with her arms squared and her eyes to the front she vanished amid a flourish of wheels The lady looked laughing But she was alone—Miss Nannie had fled secretly

Before the day was much older, and before his wife had had an opportunity to explain to him the case we wot of, Mr Tom Townsend strolled out with his cigar He took his way down to the water side for the purpose of picking up some more yacht gossip against the morrow Although he did not own a yacht he had a great regard for those who did He reached the edge of the cliff, and looked down upon the water and the vessels The squadron was assembled, and most of it lay at anchor A few craft were sailing about on the glittering blue, and the horizon was dotted with them The sun was bright, the breeze was fresh and cool, and from the boats below there came the fitful sounds of preparation the rattle of ropes, the fall of blocks, the voices of men, and the clanking of chains

There was a man sitting upon a bench under the one spruce tree that the cliff afforded He was also looking down He was brown, powerful, and, at that moment, thoughtful

"Hallo, George"

He looked round

"Hallo, Tom!" They shook hands, and then both were silent for an instant Townsend trifled with his cigar and the other became abstracted

"Have just heard about it, George" (He said this on the strength of Miss Nannie's first exclamation)

"Heard about what?"

"Oh, it!"

"Oh, yes!" George moved restlessly took off his hat and fanned himself once or twice. Then he put it on again "I didn't think it had flown so far quite yet"

"Oh, Polly and I are the only ones that know it I—upon my word—I'm sorry George!"

Then both looked off upon the sea Its low roar filled up the interval

"Yes—yes," cried the yachtsman, "it's pretty rough I acted like a brute, I suppose But she rather took me by surprise, and I—well—I don't know"

"How did it come about?"

"Why, you see I've been making a great fool of a fool of myself during the last three years about boating It's rather hard upon me and so Nannie thought it it others had that I ought to be doing something worth a little more to the world in general, though I am not sure that one can study or work too much for four months, July and August"

"Well?"

"Well, and she brought me to the point at once, and asked me to give up to morrow's race I adore her I say that that was a settler I especially wanted to sail that race Vedder has got a long main boom for his Petrel and he expects to beat me Then, I wanted to keep the Van Schoonhoven cup Then, speaking generally, I love the sea and all that belongs to it You know that I have a great deal of interest in the club and all that belongs to it, the interest of a father, I may say Then you see that it came to be somewhat of a trial to give it up"

"These little girls are pretty long headed sometimes George, she used the other ... tried myself to hold so much ... come to confess that ... high and necessity"

"You refused to do a little ... a little speaking ... about you"

"Yes"

"Well and Nannie I remember ... Puritan ... She wants ... to know ... who ... will buy his ... Perhaps she can't ... hope ... nothing but desire and she ... Vedder with ... No doubt ... for ... her life away ... been in love with her, but it is ... the ... burst out"

"By Jove! I shouldn't wonder if that were true"

"There's no particular glory to be ... lying under the weather ... which ... cravats pulled here and there, so that ... over the water faster than some ... racing master, eh?"

"Well no"

"Give it up, George"

"Oh, I have"

"You have?"

"Oh, yes You know that old Fonder has been at me for a year to sell him the Daphne, and he teased me again yesterday I had little thought of doing it until Nannie spoke up, but she was so clear about it, and had it so much at heart, and there was no ground left for me to stand upon Upon my word I feel guilty at even sitting here and staring at the boats I suppose I ought to be looking after my education at this very moment"

"Do you mean to say that you are going to sell your yacht to Fonder?"

"Exactly that And right off!" He arose to his feet "Come, go over with me, we'll find him at his cottage about this hour"

"But what's the haste?"

"Oh he wants to sail for home to morrow's race He'll take her, so I am told, just as she is crew and all There'll be nothing to do but to make a sort of verbal transfer, and the thing is done

But the Van Schoon—

"Don't, man, don't! I am in a fever of virtue Let it take its course"

They accordingly went to search for Fonder, and when they discovered him the owner of the Daphne entered into a negotiation without preface, while his friend stood at a distance, smoking The talk was brief The whilom yachtsman came out again in a few minutes, bearing himself as one might who had endured the rack with honor

"Well?" asked his friend

"It's done He agreed to take the craft if she's all I represented her, and he will sail her to morrow in his own name Ah, Tom, my heart has had a twist I can't stay here to see the sacrifice It would madden me to watch the Daphne come in a second or a third, and Fonder is sure to make her do the one thing or the other I'm going to drive off into the country till it's all over Come with me, won't you?"

"Oh, I can't, I'm married you know"

"Ah, yes, that is true, I forgot it for the moment"

"But Nannie!"

"Nannie! You can tell her if you like No, wait On the whole, I think I'll let her find it out by accident If I should send her the story of my conversion, it will look a little like an act of the good fox of the fable A weak child of luxury cannot, with a good grace, suddenly declare himself to be a giant of virtue to one who has always been a giantess She has long since been above me, Tom, and I hope that a night of meditation will put me into a fit state for presentation to her, to morrow Good by"

He disappeared Mr. Townsend went home and told his wife that there was heroism in the world.

At dusk, Miss Nannie sat alone in her garden, with her plaid drawn up about her shoulders and feet Her head hung down and she ... silence. This scene of solitude and desolation was new to her In the daytime the gay sunlight had furnished her with distractions, but now she was in the dark, listening to the dreary roar of the waters, and the still more dreary murmurs and upbraidings of her heart

At nine o'clock a man appeared before her, it seemed as if he shot up from out of the ground

There was a shriek But it was nobody but the Daphne's sailing master He was in search of the owner Miss Nannie replied that she did not know where he was The man made a gesture of surprise which did not escape the young lady's notice He intimated that he had come here because he had been successful in all his previous searches This was innocent on his part, but Miss Nannie blushed in the dark The sailor was about to retire, when Miss Nannie asked him what his errand was

This led to telling her of the attempted transfer of the yacht to Mr Fonder

Miss Nannie sprang to her feet.

"But Mr Fonder, mom, won't take the boat, nor have anything to do with her, because four of the men have gone off into town, and there ben't enough left to sail her to morrow"

Miss Nannie, excited beyond measure, fired half a dozen questions straight into the matter

Then did the yacht belong to its old owner? Yes It was certain he could be found in time to rectify matters? The captain shook his head Then, unless the men were secured and brought back, the race would be lost? Emphatically, yes In all likelihood where were the men? In some of the liquor shops of the town There were many of these places About five hundred And the captain would assist her to find the runaways? Yes [with admiration]!

To this pass, then had she come! In a minute infused with iron she ordered out her coachman, and then her pony phaeton and a light spring wagon, then she ordered the coachman into the latter, and bade him follow where she and the captain led in the other vehicle

Thus arranged, the parties began a search for the recreants They descended into the lowermost and the vilest parts of the adjacent city, and Miss Nannie with her skirts gathered in front of her pushed, without the slightest hint of recoil, into the dens that she saw As she appeared, brawling ceased, men put down their liquor, and the proprietors advanced and asked respectfully what she wanted The first of the crew she saw was lying like a log upon the floor of a foul back parlor The captain and coachman took him by the heels and shoulders and placed him in the wagon Miss Nannie redeemed his cap for one dollar (he had pawned it to the barkeeper for ten cents' worth of some terrible drink), and then she drove on to the next place, four doors off The next sailor with the Daphne's uniform was then engaging in a fight He had already been knocked down, and was covered with blood He dropped instantly as Miss Nannie pointed him out with her whip and the ring scattered silently The captive struggled to the wagon of his own accord It was the hunt went on until midnight At that hour all the bars were closed, and yet there remained quite a hundred unsearched Despair! They paused in the dark deserted street The coachman was burly, and it began to rain Suddenly, the fighting sailor (probably grateful at his salvation from a thrashing) suggested, "Station house, mum"

They drove there in a hurry Law had seized upon fifty individuals Miss Nannie, with her head swimming with sickness, descended with the captain to the gas lit crypts and searched the noisome crowd The two sailors were there They were in a drunken ... in the wagon where the ... rolled and ... with the other two

Thus triumphant the cortege returned to the neighborhood of the beach and the boats The captain gravely besought her, ... into a two ... sailors were lifted ... captain ... them ... to the yacht, ... the distance ... minutes ... back again ... two were deposited in the ... Miss Nannie tumbled down into ... The coachman ... captain ... She ... first, ... "I shall sleep on board the Daphne to night" Then she ... the second "I am going to make sure that no other mishaps occur Give way, please, to ... the ... steps"

All that night she ... eyed upon ... to ... the fog and the ... She ... that she was inventing ... She did not ... board, but at ... of the ... over ... head, ... started up to look She would not have known ... if the yacht were sinking or drifting ... she ... all the same She often ... that George would ... up and catch her sitting there ... noble desire only to make ... to return again She was full of ... swelled with every one of the dismal hours She was a changed woman, so she decided ... little burst of energy had filled her with ... What could she not do? ... ignored ... speeches ... morning, and thought Polly had been silly soft with her

But where was George?

Supreme anxiety, and ... of supreme worth exercised her spirit, and she longed for daylight in order that she might "do"

At meridian, or thereabouts on the next day, the great race of 1879 was coming home with a northeast breeze, and all Springtide was mad The hills were covered with throngs of gazers and the waters were packed with boats and barges, which were packed in turn with ladies and the critics who did not yacht The wide course was clear and the judges' sloop alone seemed to block the way The six racers were bearing straight down, two and side All along the course, bands played, and the throngs on the outermost heights began to break up and to stream toward the goal in order to see the finish Like great Damon, hard up on the moment, a wherry dashed out from the shore and made for the judges' boat in spite of the cries and commands of the water police Townsend and his favored companions saw it

"Hurrah! Here's George!"

Twenty hands were stretched out to help him up In light of the whispers which, since daylight had been circling about the town concerning the Daphne and Miss Nannie and him if he was the mentioned mystery He was in a blaze of excitement He took Townsend's arm

"How could I help coming back, Tom? I smelled the eastern wind from the ocean twenty miles in the country, and I turned my horse around directly Look at that, sir!" pointing to the race, "who says that is unworthy of manly admiration?"

He put a number of rapid questions Tom professed great ignorance. All that he found out at the moment was that all the yachts, the Daphne and the Petrel among them, had sailed as had been intended

"Where's Nannie? Quick! Here?"

"No. Probably in agony somewhere"

"O, Tom, Tom, just look at that sight! Devour it with your eyes You'll never see its like again! Six clouds racing! Why could not Nannie find pleasure in such a scene? Hasn't she a soul? By Jove! the Daphne leads! Aft with your mainsheet, master! Why—why—in the name of mercy doesn't he haul aft his mainsheet! He's doing it! he's doing it! Now your jibs! your jibs! Oh, why am I here? Fonder gets the cup!"

The boats came on. The air was alive with cries and screams, and the trumpets and guns made more noise than ever.

—The trump law goes into effect to-morrow The material portion of this act states that any person [illegible] about or in place begging, or subsisting upon charity, for the purpose of acquiring money or a living, and shall have no fixed place of residence or lawful occupation in the county or city in which he shall be arrested, shall be deemed a tramp and guilty of a misdemeanor, and on conviction shall be sentenced to undergo an imprisonment by solitary confinement at labor in the county jail or workhouse for not more than two months in the discretion of the court If a man can prove that he is not a tramp he shall not be punished If he can establish that he does not make a practice of going about begging in the manner set forth, it shall be sufficient for his acquittal and discharge The second section is much more severe, and sets forth that any tramp who shall enter any dwelling house without the permission of the owner or occupant or shall kindle any fire in the highway or on the land of another without the owners consent, or be found carrying any firearms or other dangerous weapon with intent unlawfully to do injury to or intimidate any other person—which intent may be inferred by the jury trying the case from the fact that the defendant is a tramp and so armed—or shall do or threaten any injury not amounting to robbery to any person or to the real or personal estate of another, shall, upon conviction, be guilty of a misdemeanor and sentenced to undergo an imprisonment by separate solitary labor for a period not exceeding three years But no female and no minor under sixteen can be punished as a tramp nor does the law apply to the blind, the deaf, the dumb maimed or crippled Leaving visitors prima facie evidence that the person guilty of both is a tramp

—Barclay J Smith, who was brought from Montana on a requisition from Governor Hoyt, had a hearing before Esq Iuhat Doylestown last Thursday No evidence criminating Mr Smith was found on which he could be summarily discharged from custody If there was no reason why Barclay J Smith should have been arrested in Montana all those who aided in the arrest, if he was guilty of the crime of embezzlement of which he was charged in the prosecution should have produced the evidence As they did not and as the State's Attorney stated that there was not a single person or a single fact to make out a case of criminality against Mr Smith, it looks as though those most active in the matter were only actuated by a spirit of revenge, in bringing him as a criminal from Montana

—Many Bristol people visited the Langhorne camp meeting on Sunday and during the week We do not learn of many conversions having been made either at this or the Spiritualist camp meeting There are strong indications, however, that Deacon Church of the Enterprise contemplates going over to the Spiritualists It has been cruelly suggested that he is governed by mercenary motives in his new departure, that by becoming a Spiritualist he hopes to be able to get his news through Spiritualistic sources, and thus not only chronicle the news without, as he now does, denying the truth one week of what he published the previous week, but also to print the news of forthcoming events correctly Last week's Enterprise contains the following interesting item which was no doubt dictated by the spirits "The person who carries an umbrella which they know is not theirs, will please look on the inside where the ribs come together, see the owner's name and return it to this office The present holder is not really known but strongly suspected" To whom does "they" and "theirs" refer, and why is "the person" or "they" requested to see the owner's name before returning it? It is not right to keep the owner waiting so long for his name to be returned

—The August number of Hubbard's Educator, publishes a black list of "irresponsible" "contemptible" newspapers whose publishers do not give advertisers what they agree to. The idea is a good one for there is nothing that a conscientious publisher has more to contend with than the claims and deceptions of those whose business depends upon their ability to misrepresent and mislead innocent advertisers

FROM SITKA, ALASKA

We are permitted to publish the following letter from Alaska Some of the statements therein contained are freely at variance with the notions of many of our readers

SITKA, ALASKA, July 15, 1879

Your letter of June 20th is at hand, following me away up into Alaska

From Portland, Oregon, we travelled northward, by steamboat R R and steamboat, to Seattle, Washington Territory, on Puget Sound On our arrival we were welcomed by the strains of a brass band, and by the firing of cannon, because the steamboat had an excursion party on board, containing some Governors Mayors, &c I am sorry to say that the last shot of the cannon killed a man who came suddenly around the corner of the building, directly in front of the cannon, as it went off The leather had entered his heart and killed him instantly

From Seattle we went through the Gulf of Puget Sound, by steamboat, to Port Townsend At Port Townsend we took an English steamer and crossed the Straits of Juan de Fuca to Victoria, British Columbia, where we spent two weeks in going about Vancouvers Island and looking at the fine American mountains which show so well from British soil We also attended at Victoria a concert given by Remenzi, the Hungarian Violinist

Now we have come to Alaska by steamship 1 100 miles from Victoria We took the inside route, which for a large portion of the way is in between islands showing to us some of the finest scenery in the world

Alaska is one fifth of the Great Land It is a vast land, for it covers over 580 107 square miles It has as large territory as all the United States east of the Mississippi river and north of the Carolinas and Gulf States It has more islands than any other part of the U S having over 1 000 square miles It has great Volcanic region, having 50 volcanoes 10 of which are active and one of them the Fisherhorn, nearly 9000 feet high It is the great Switzerland region—some of them are vast and grander than any in the Alps Mt Fairweather is a glacier extending 50 miles, and breaks off a perpendicular wall 60 feet high and 8 miles broad It has a wonderful region for hot and mineral springs Gordon's one of the largest, a large smoking caldron 18 miles in circumference Fish abound in the greatest abundance—such as salmon, cod, herring, halibut, millet, mecon, &c It is an immense fur district In huge numbers are found the beaver, otter, fox, black bear, martin, mink lynx wolverine, reindeer, deer, elk, mountain sheep, moose, wolf, and last but not least the famous seal fur fishery which have yielded to the Government a per cent interest per annum on the $7 00 000 the Government paid for Alaska It is largely covered by timber the trees being balsam, hemlock, yellow cedar, spruce, hemlock and white pine, and in such vast quantities as to supply the world for ages to come Coal copper, sulphur, petroleum, amber gold and silver are found in the mountains Alaska has the highest mountain in the United States, St Elias river in the United States The Yukon is 2000 miles long navigable for steamers 1500 miles It is 70 miles wide at its mouth, 1000 miles away from its mouth is in places 20 miles wide Alaska is 2200 miles at its line from east to west It has a coast line of 25 000 miles by U S coast survey measurement which is equal to one around the globe The climate on the coast is effected by the Japan Gulf Stream—moist and warm in winter like that of Washington D C Apples, root crops and oats and barley do well Cattle thrive and grass is excellent Frost comes about the last of November, first snow only in December, which soon melts April 1st gardening commences Scarcely any ice is formed San Francisco is midway between Liverpool, Maine, and the western end of Alaska Sitka is finely located, much in decay because our Government has neglected to protect it and have given it no government or laws

DISGRACEFUL ENGLISH SOCIETY

What means this strange commotion about Sara Bernhardt, the French actress, who is announced to visit the United States next year? Before going into ecstasies over this woman and preparing to receive her with open arms it is meet that Americans should remember that she is so far lost to virtue as to be the mother of four children, yet without a husband and it is even hinted that if asked, she could not tell who are the fathers of these children Mr Smalley, the Tribune correspondent must have received a pleasing recognition from Sara, in some way to be induced to write such glowing accounts of her from London, otherwise he must be beside himself Another London visitant, M D Conway, writing to the Cincinnati Commercial, keeps within the bounds of propriety in his reference to this woman, while, at the same time, he indulges in a sharp criticism of the manner in which English society condones immorality in high places He says "I do not intend to throw a stone at Mlle Bernhardt She and George Eliot, and other eminent persons who defy the customs of society, are competent to judge of right and wrong and are free to act I do not judge them. But what I wish to point out is the social phenomenon presented when the leaders of a society which crushes thousands of poor girls in the mine for illegitimate sexual relations should at the same time lavish admiration upon women of the same character who happen to have talent Sara Bernhardt has never been married, she has four children, she brought to London with her, and took in every fine house where she was entertained, a bright boy who called her 'Mademoiselle, my mamma' There was no concealment whatever Fashionable London was at her feet It was amply demonstrated that fashionable English society does not really respect the customs which it professes to hold essential. The sanctity of marriage becomes more and more a thing for the poor and ignorant. Sara Bernhardt is a woman of real genius I can understand how the splendor of genius displayed in her Phedre could hide a multitude of sins, even for the loudly righteous But what I have observed of her career in one of the institutions of London leads me to feel that it is not through overlooking her sins or forgetting them, but, to some extent, because of them, that she has enjoyed a brilliant apotheosis The constant gossip has lent a piquancy to her presence, and the enthusiasm has been quite as great among those who could not understand or appreciate her performances

SORTS.

—Rev. Wm. Hance, will preach to the boatmen at the canal basin, on Sunday evening next at 6 o'clock.

—The lodge of Loyal Sons of America which some of our young men have become interested in will be formally organized next Tuesday evening.

—At the regular monthly meeting of the Union Building Company, last Monday evening, ten loans were sold to William A. Worrell, at $14,00 premium, per loan.

—The School Board has extended the vacation of the teachers and pupils of the public schools a week longer, so that the schools will not open until the eighth of September.

—The game of base ball, last Saturday, between the Keystone and Trenton clubs resulted in a victory for the former by a score of 17 to 14. The Bristol boys are jubilant over their victory.

—Hazel Hess, at his slaughter house, on Monday, with two assistants, killed and dressed a steer in twenty-two minutes. If any butchers around can beat this we would like to hear from them.

—James Parker, an excited native of Erin, from Cornwell's station, went to William Fine's and tried to borrow a revolver to shoot Mr. J. M. Brown, whom he felt aggrieved at because on Friday night he was driven away from the depot for drunkenness and disorderly conduct.

—On Saturday night, the 2d instant, the premises of Enos W. Bonsteel, on the Bristol turnpike, near Cornwell's station, was visited by horse thieves and a horse, carriage and a set of silver-mounted harness were stolen. The Bensalem company have offered a reward of $100.

—On Sunday afternoon our citizens will have the pleasure of listening to an address by Judge Peirce, of Philadelphia, who is sojourning among us. He will speak at the Grove upon the subject of temperance, and from the unusual opportunities he has had, while engaged in his judical duties upon the bench, of witnessing the great evils of intemperance, his experience will be found interesting as well as instructive.

—From Trenton we have received a communication signed "A Manager" commenting upon the game of base ball which took place last Saturday between the Trenton and Keystone clubs. The writer praises the Keystones very highly, praising each player individually, and winds up by advising the Philadelphia and Easton clubs to give our boys a trial, and prophesying that with practice and good management the Keystone club will become the champion nine of Pennsylvania.

—While camp meetings were going on all around us we had an out of doors meeting of our own last Sunday afternoon, at the Grove. Mr. William A. Laverty, who was announced to be the speaker of the occasion, was not able to be present but, instead, one of the ablest and most earnest temperance advocates in the country addressed the meeting eloquently and effectily. The speaker was Mrs. Annie Wittenmyer, President of the Women's National Temperance Union and publisher of The Christian Woman. There was a large attendance and the remarks of Mrs. Wittenmyer were listened to with pleasure and attention.

—The proprietor of W. W. Cole's New York and New Orleans Circus, Museum, Hippodrome, Menagerie and Congress of Living Wonders is well known as being one of the most enterprising and indefatigable caterers for the amusement of the public on this continent. This season the attractions presented are even greater than usual. Mr. and Mrs. Bates, the "largest people in the world," accompany the circus, and to see them alone is worth double the entrance money charged. This gigantic couple weigh between them something over one-half-ton, and average over eight feet in height. Some years ago they had the honor of appearing before royalty in England, and receiving substantial tokens of appreciation from Queen Victoria and the Duke of Edinburgh. The menagerie comprises a magnificent collection of wild animals, while the circus hippodrome and museum are all worthy of a visit. Such an unrivalled combination of attractions cannot fail to draw well.

—It is our painful duty to record the death of John W. Adams, which occurred on Friday last at the residence of his father, Dr. G. W. Adams. He was sick but a short time with typhoid fever, and the announcement of his death caused general surprise, being to many persons the first intelligence they had of his illness. He was well known in our neighborhood and as much respected and honored for his sterling integrity and moral worth as he was well known. By his death, in the first blush of manhood cut down by an insidious foe in the midst of his usefulness, we lose one of a class of young men we can ill afford to spare. He was energetic and industrious in his profession, and had fair prospects of success in life. He was always interested in what tended toward the moral good of the community, always casting his lot upon the side of truth and justice. He was affable and courteous; was ever willing to enter into any project for the pleasure and profit of the social circle he so greatly adorned by his ingenuous manners, his gentlemanly qualities and the purity of his life, and as a son, a brother and friend, he was a model which his young friends and acquaintances may profitably follow. The whole community sympathize with the family in their bereavement, feeling that the loss is one which is shared in by all. The funeral took place on Tuesday morning, the body being interred in the Friends' burying ground.

The Electric Light.

Bristol will have an opportunity of witnessing this new and powerful illuminator. W. W. Cole's Circus will use it on Friday Aug. 29. This light caused by electricity requires a 20 horse power engine, a 30 horse power boiler, and 20,000 yards of insulated telegraph wire. It is a great, bright, dazzling light, yet emits no heat. A newspaper of the finest print can be read two miles from the jets. Colors appear natural. Blue is blue; green is green, which is not the case with gas light. There are no dangers in its use. It does not vitiate the air, and is perfectly white. A thousand gas jets have the appearance of a few tallow candles burning when placed by the side of this wonderful electric light. The only expense attending it being the original investment of engine, telegraph wire and machine or battery which amounts to about fifteen thousand dollars. The actual daily cost of the light is merely a trifle. It is the light of the future, and will be soon be utilized so as to illuminate cities. It is certainly the greatest discovery of the present century, and has caused more astonishment, excited more admiration and is the theme of more conversation than any circumstance that has come to the notice of the public within the last decade.

—Oil-well excitements and speculations, lucky "strikes," and grievous failures, form the subject of a story, entitled "Nora's Oil-well," which is announced to appear, with an illustration, in the September St. Nicholas, and which is to tell the tale of a miner's orphan children in the center of the oil district.

—A sea serpent, or rather a river serpent, 100 feet long, with a head like a whale, a flat fan-tail, crusty fins and dark brown color, is vouched for by about 100 people as having been seen repeatedly within a week off the mouth of a big St. Louis sewer.

—Mr. Hermon Wallingford, of Portland, has a pair of mittens made from hair clipped from his large Newfoundland dog. The hair was spun into yarn and the yarn was knit into mittens. They are warm and pliable and wear well.

—Mrs. Belva A. Lockwood, of Washington, was on Monday admitted to the bar of Fairfax county, Va., by Judge Sangster. She was warmly welcomed by members of the bar, as the first female lawyer admitted to practice in the State.

—A dispatch from Montreal says Prof. Grimley's balloon, after a successful trip of 47 miles, descended safely Thursday evening at St. Aime. The aerial car does not seem to have any appreciable effect in steering the balloon.

—John E. Seeley, of Goshen, N. Y., is reported to have returned from Western mining speculations and a three years' absence with $5,000,000. He was a horse farrier when he left Goshen.

—Unlicensed distilleries have greatly multiplied in South Carolina since the appropriations for U. S. Marshals' fees were exhausted.

(Concluded from first page)

The Daphne was first, the Petrel second and all the others ever white behind The great schooner, rising and plunging in the green sea, hugged close to the wind, and covered her decks with spray From her immense canvases, towering and swelling in the air, there came deep roar, and her dizzy mast heads cut huge wild circles against the azure sky Her black and glittering bow turned an emerald furrow, and behind her there boiled a caldron of foam She was a million times a swan She flew like a frightened fish and it seemed as if she were about to rise into the air

She approached the home buoy

George felt himself astride the deck

"I didn't think she could do that for any other man but me, but, like all her sex—if what a price that is look at those sails swell! but the masts crack and sc the mast about her bows! If Nannie were here, Tom I believe—by gracious, there's a woman aboard! A woman, if you'll believe it, aboard a racing yacht! Lender's sister I suppose I'—at this instant the Daphne shot past the judges, at the distance of 500 feet, and a prolonged cheer rolled down from the hill sides, and a few guns burst from the guns upon the beach Flags dipped flecks of yawls put out, and seconds of applause rose from all quarters

The Daphne rounded to, and the peaks of her sails dropped with a rattle The yachtsman, oppressed with a load of sorrow, stared gloomily It seemed as if the lamp of his happiness had gone out He could not cheer he could no be glad, true, his yacht had won, but yet she had won for another man His occupation was gone He was no longer a pilot He was a book worm

He cast an admiring glance to remain upon his unwilling boat He gave a violent start Then with a single bound he threw himself headlong into his yawl, and, slipping the oars that had been was off for the yacht He saw Tom and bowed —

"That is not Lender's sister, is Nonsuch"

Townsend laughed and called Lady to look at the flying hero

Nannie was waiting for him, blushing like a rose He leaped on board, and speechlessly seizing her hands, drew her to the other side of the mainsail and there embraced her privately

He stammered through his own explanations, and she, with scant attention, detailed the default Lender, and her search for the drunken sailors and his assumption in "your" basis of the command of the Daphne It was therefore clear to the yachtsman that the Tom was still his and that the Von Schoonhoven cup was still his, and that the loveliest of all women was still his

He was overcome by this elysian flood and was helpless He could only sigh and look into her eyes

"O George, but I should ever have thought you were doing wrong! she faltered, "that I should ever have been your cruel Ah, Dolly pride must be ashamed so sorry—so very sorry I was very much crushed, George, I—I urged to find you I hoped that you would come so that I might say that we must be friends with other as we were before I didn't know how much you were to me I thought for a little while that we could separate as strangers, but ah that dreadful coldness that came over me! All was so black—so wretched! But" (here she put a little more sweet music in her tone), just at the worst of it, the sailing master came with his doleful story Ah, who could have been gladder than I was this morning when we were first I post the Herald just after we rounded the red buoy and started down through the Old channel I was a little ill I think, at first the capers and I locked white just when she struck the swells in the open—and—and I guess being sick made me a little cleverer hearted, George Perhaps we can yacht for three months and be great for the other nine can't we? Speak—can't we? And you'll forgive my being, for just once, a little, very little, human scamp, won't you?"

THE TWILIGHT HAS DIED

FROM THE GERMAN OF HEI

By Will Hardy

The twilight has died in darkness
The mist gathers over the sea
The waves roll on from land with a moaning
What may you here whispering to me

The sea nymph comes up from the dreamers
Sits down by my side on the shore
He presents of snow-white gleam and glow
Through the hims to rest evermore

She clasps me so close to her bosom
That I can't scarcely stay,
"Look right does thou press too close your eyes,
Thou beautiful water fay"

"With clinging arms I caress her,
And kisses that will burn and melt
For there is a charm that will keep us warm
In the chill of this bitter night

"The moon looks paler and paler
Through the haze of the cloudy sky
Her eyes are more dim and heavy as tears they swim
Thou beautiful water fay"

"Her eyes are not moved a hair more tearful
The light dims and from all they lie
In a drop on the sun white bosom a pearl
Which I brought with me up from the sea

"The scream of the sea mews is dying still
The waves climb and thirst to play
And thy heart leaps so fast up from its deeps
Thou beautiful water fay"

"My heart it leaps still so up from its deeps
By a tempest too fierce to dwell
For I love thee too well for words to tell
Thou dearest of mortal kind
